OBITUARY.

Died, at his residence in Sumner county, on the 17th ult., Col. George Smith, in the 73rd year of his age.

The deceased was born in the Western portion of Va., on the 12th November, 1776, and removed with his father (the late Gen. Dan. Smith,) at the early age of 7 years in 1784, to the then territory of Tennessee. Thus, it will be seen, that the father was one of the Pioneers of the State, and George, his son, moved in the midst of the dangerous and exciting scenes, that marked the early settlements of this country.—Schools, being scarce at that day, the opportunities for education, were of course limited; yet his father placing an inestimable value upon the cultivation of the mind, though his duties were of an important and varied character, saw with that delight which a parent only can feel, his only son when he arrived at the age of manhood, a liberally educated man. His profession was that of the law; in the practice of which, he engaged but a few years. At an early period, whilst the Legislature was being held at Knoxville, he was a member from this county.—When young, he married Tabitha, the eldest daughter of the late Capt. John Donelson, who it may also be well to say was one of the hardy pioneers of Tennessee. Upon this event he retired upon a farm near his fathers, where he continued to pursue quietly his agricultural pursuits, in the bosom of his infant family, until war, was declared between Great Britain and the United States, upon the happening of this eventful period, he at once came forth from his retirement and volunteered his services in defence of his country's rights—he was chosen captain of a company, and afterwards the commander of a Regiment, and was with Gen. Jackson at the storming of Pensecola, and closed his military career in the ever memorable battle of N. Orleans. Peace being now restored, he rejoined his family with whom he spent, almost his whole time while he lived. Though frequently urged by his friends to engage in public life, his education and social habits, suiting so well to ensure success, yet no arguments to change a determination formed of remaining in private life, ever succeeded. From the close of the war up to the day of his death, his pursuits were agricultural, during which time he was greatly devoted to his books, of which he was ever passionately fond. He had through his life an undue share of good health, having been blessed with a good constitution—as he advanced, it seemed in an equal ratio, his thirst for knowledge increased; in this way, it is believed from a too sedantery life, disease was engendered, which closed his earthly career: leaving behind, to moan his loss, a fond wife, three daughters, a son and many relations and friends.
